Re: Community Water Fluoridation

Dear U.S. Representatives and Senators:

We, the undersigned organizations, are proud to affirm the safety and effectiveness of community water fluoridation. What has been lauded as one of the ten greatest public health achievements of the 20th century has recently become politicized and gravely misrepresented. The possibility of a federal effort to cease the fluoridation of water supplies – stripping that authority from local and state jurisdictions – has become known. It is our duty – as health professionals, dental experts, advocates, and researchers – to proactively combat this misinformation being spread to the people of the United States.

Our organizations unite in deep fear of the consequences of the cessation of water fluoridation. The U.S. experienced massive reductions in the prevalence of tooth decay in the years that followed its introduction in the 1950s and 1960s. Most people in the U.S. today have never seen nor personally experienced the severity of tooth decay that exists without fluoride. With an abrupt departure from water fluoridation, our nation would undoubtedly experience a rapidly rising incidence of decay. The U.S. does not have capacity in the oral health workforce to support the emergency, surgical, and restorative dental needs that would result. There would be increased pain and suffering, and more missed school and work. None of this is necessary.

Much of the recent discourse is based on incomplete information and interpretation of studies that have limitations undermining their usefulness. The public view of this information has been an exaggerated response driven by political and social influences rather than scientific perspectives. It is important to note that in its almost century long use, water fluoridation has been studied widely and its benefits and safety validated.

Community water fluoridation remains the only way to ensure that all people – especially those who are at greatest risk for dental disease and who have the fewest resources to maintain their oral health – can reap its cavity-preventing benefits. Dental teams, other health care professionals, and public health officials work together with patients and families to identify the various sources of fluoride being consumed or used and determine if they are sufficient for preventing cavities while not leading to issues like fluorosis. We remain committed to fluoride in water as a way to reach those most in need and we support continued research that can inform and update its optimal level over time.

We have so much more work to do to ensure all people can get the dental care they need and achieve optimal oral health. Community water fluoridation has been a proven safe, effective, equitable way of helping us work toward that goal in the United States. Our organizations remain prepared and ready to support local and state efforts to preserve community water fluoridation for the benefit of all.
